The recycling of paper is the process by which waste paper is turned into new products. It has number of important benefits besides saving trees from being cut down. It saves waste paper from occupying landfills and producing methane as it breaks down. Paper recycling saves a lot of energy and water, reduces tree felling and improves air quality.

The recycled paper is produced from waste paper. The waste paper is broken down into a pulp. The recycled papers are produced through continuous production process. It is a type of production system in which materials being processed are continuously in motion. During continuous processing, different parts flow from one process to the next to make a finished product.
