appreciated the ROSA team for successfully organizing the event and wished her best.

The 'Paruthi Pen' Ms. T. Kannama shared that the waste produced by non-biodegradable sanitary pads inspired her to come up with the organic herbal sanitary pad production. The product started at a small level and was promoted through her Youtube channel @kannammat7700. She then stated that the production of the sanitary pads are done at her home and motivated the women to start one at their home as well. She also highlighted that it is the duty of every woman to know how to make the sanitary napkins for themselves and urged them not to rely on the store bought products. The Dioxin present in the store bought napkins causes cancer and other health hazards, she said. When talking about Mooligai Napkin she stated that pads contain neem, aloe vera and triphala powder which has antibacterial properties and helps absorb smell. She also added that they even help cure urinary infections. She then demonstrated the making of the sanitary pads to the rural women. Ms. T. Kannama also clarified the doubts of the rural women. The program ended on a successful note with positive feedbacks from the audience.
