Abstract: In summer 2018, central and northern Europe were stricken by extreme drought and heat (DH2018). The DH2018 differed from previous events in being preceded by extreme spring warming and brightening, but moderate rainfall deficits, yet registering the fastest transition between wet winter conditions and extreme summer drought. Using 11 vegetation models, we show that spring conditions promoted increased vegetation growth, which, in turn, contributed to fast soil moisture depletion, amplifying the summer drought. We find regional asymmetries in summer ecosystem carbon fluxes: increased (reduced) sink in the northern (southern) areas affected by drought. These asymmetries can be explained by distinct legacy effects of spring growth and of water-use efficiency dynamics mediated by vegetation composition, rather than by distinct ecosystem responses to summer heat/drought. The asymmetries in carbon and water exchanges during spring and summer 2018 suggest that future land-management strategies could influence patterns of summer heat waves and droughts under long-term warming.

5S CERTIFIED GARMENT UNITS – AN OUTCOME-BASED APPROACH By Dr.L.Meena, Assistant Professor, Department of Management Studies, Fatima College (Autonomous), Madurai Dr.R.Alamelu, Assistant Professor – III, School of Management Studies, Sastra University, Tanjore Abstract: Necessity drives organizations to adopt best quality practices. 5S, a Japanese concept of quality, has been implemented successfully by many corporate operating at global levels and has attained continuous improvement in their organizations. 5S, though a global concept, nowadays is being employed by local or regional organizations also due to the necessity of quality-drive. This study made an attempt to determine the outcome of 5S implementation in the garment units in Tamilnadu. It analyzed the level of benefits enjoyed by five different 5S certified garment units in Tamilnadu. The study also determined the contributing factor for 5S implementation by these garment units and the impact of the contributing factors on the level of benefits enjoyed by the units. It was found that the garment units which put 5S into action with the defined purpose as 'Continuous improvement', reaped higher level of benefits out of such implementation. KEY WORDS: 5S, Continuous improvement and Garment units INTRODUCTION Quality is a measure of excellence or the state of being free from defects, deficiencies and significant deviations from standards. Quality is a strict commitment on the part of manufacturing organisations. An organization that is fully committed to deliver quality products to its customers is trusted to achieve customer reliability and continued customer delight in this competitive era. Japanese organizations are pioneers in inventing quality concepts and systems into their manufacturing processes. One such quality concept invented by Toyota Motor Company, a Japanese car making company, invented the concept of "5S" in its Toyota Production system (TPS). TPS is the manufacturing method followed in Toyota. 5S, as the name suggests, is the acronym

of five Japanese words Seiri, Seiton, Seiso, Seiketsu and Shitsuke,

This study made an attempt to determine the outcome of 5S implementation in the garment units in Tamilnadu. It analyzed the level of benefits enjoyed by five different 5S certified garment units in Tamilnadu. The study also determined the contributing factor for 5S implementation by these garment units and the impact of the contributing factors on the level of benefits enjoyed by the units. It was found that the garment units which put 5S into action with the defined purpose as 'Continuous improvement', reaped higher level of benefits out of such implementation. KEY WORDS: 5S, Continuous improvement and Garment units INTRODUCTION Quality is a measure of excellence or the state of being free from defects, deficiencies and significant deviations from standards. Quality is a strict commitment on the part of manufacturing organisations. An organization that is fully committed to deliver quality products to its customers is trusted to achieve customer reliability and continued customer delight in this competitive era. Japanese organizations are pioneers in inventing quality concepts and systems into their manufacturing processes. One such quality concept invented by Toyota Motor Company, a Japanese car making company, invented the concept of "5S" in its Toyota Production system (TPS).
